Typeface Trademark Symbols

The following list of trademark attribution symbols is arranged alphabetically by family name. The name of the originating company (e.g., ITC) and prefixes such as “new” in names like “New Baskerville” were not used for alphabetizing. The trademark attribution statements are in Appendix B of this document.

Introduction

You can use the Adobe® Font Name Reference Table (Fntnames.pdf) document to determine font filenames in Windows®, to see the style linking options for your font, to locate a font's package number, or to find out which fonts are in a certain package. Fntnames.pdf also includes font menu name revision information in Appendix A, and font name trademark attribution statements in Appendix B.

Fntnames.pdf includes the following font name information:

- Package number — the font's package number, used for ordering and organizing fonts.
- PostScript® name — the name ATM® or the PostScript printer driver uses to link the bitmap (screen) font or font metrics file with the outline (printer) font.
- Macintosh menu name — the font's name as it appears in Macintosh font menus.
- Windows menu name — the font's name as it appears in Windows font menus, followed by the style link.
- Filename prefix — the eight-character filename prefix for Windows font filenames.

Locating a Font Name in Fntnames.pdf

Fntnames.pdf lists fonts by package number, not alphabetically. After you open Fntnames.pdf, you can search for a certain font using the Adobe Acrobat® Find command. Choose Tools > Find or press Command + f (Macintosh) or Cntrl + f (Windows) to specify your search criteria, and then click Find, or click the binoculars icon on the toolbar.

Font Filenames in Windows

To copy font files to or from another location in Windows, you'll need to know your fonts' filename prefixes. While many font names are longer than eight characters, all Type 1 font filenames have eight-character prefixes. Font filename prefixes contain up to five characters, followed by underscore characters to make a total of eight characters. For example, "Hv_____" is the complete filename prefix for the Helvetica font file.

Font filename prefixes often do not resemble the font's actual name (e.g., Akzidenz Grotesk font files begin with Gf, Centaur font files begin with Nr). You can search for your font's name in Fntnames.pdf to determine its font filename prefix. Fntnames.pdf lists font filename prefixes immediately following the more familiar PostScript, Macintosh menu, and Windows menu font filenames.

Font Style Linking General Information

Type 1 fonts (also called PostScript fonts) often appear with different names in Macintosh font menus than they do in Windows font menus. While each Type 1 font has a unique PostScript name that is identical on the Macintosh and in Windows, the same Type 1 font appears with a different name in font menus on the Macintosh, in font menus in Windows, and in Adobe Type Manager (ATM) for Windows. These name differences can lead to a perception that fonts are missing in Windows, and can cause fonts to be substituted with other fonts when you transfer files across platforms.

Although fonts may have different names on different platforms, once you understand font name style links, you can use them to access your fonts on both platforms and avoid font matching problems.

Font Names and Style Links

Windows can display a maximum of four styles (e.g., normal, bold, italic, bolditalic) per family in application font menus. Because of this limitation, many font families have bold, semibold, or italic members that do not appear in font menus. To access them, you must apply a style link--that is, apply the bold or italic type style to text formatted with a regular (roman) font.

The Macintosh, on the other hand, doesn't limit the number of font family styles that can appear in font menus, so you can apply any font style in two ways: you can select the font in any available style directly from the font menu, or select the regular font and then apply a type style to it.

Because of the different ways you can access a font, the same Type 1 font may have a different name in a font menu on the Macintosh than it does in a font menu in Windows. Additionally, ATM for Windows may display different names in than those in font menus.

To help you determine which style link to use, ATM lists each font's Windows menu name, followed by the style link required to use it. ATM 4.0 lists font names and style links in the format "Fontname, Style link," while ATM 3.0x and earlier list font names and style links in the format "Fontname, STYLE LINK."

For example, the font Futura-Bold appears in these variations::

PostScript font name	Futura-Heavy
Macintosh font menu name	Futura Heavy
Windows font menu name	Futura Medium
ATM 4.0 font name, Style link	Futura Medium, Bold
ATM 3.0x and earlier font name, STYLE LINK	Futura Medium, BOLD

In other words, "Futura Heavy" does not appear in font menus in Windows--you must access it using a style link: format text with Futura Medium, and then apply the bold type style. On the Macintosh, Futura Heavy does appear in font menus, so you can format text with the font directly. You can also select Futura Medium from the font menu, then apply the bold type style, just as in Windows. If you select Futura Medium from the font menu, and then apply the bold type style, the font becomes Futura Heavy, exactly the same font as if you directly selected Futura Heavy from the font menu.

However, if you select a font style directly from the font menu on the Macintosh, rather than selecting the regular font and then applying a type style, you may have font substitution problems when you transfer files from the Macintosh to Windows. If the Windows version of the font style does not have the same font menu name as the Macintosh version you selected, you may receive a font matching error or your text may appear and print in an unexpected font. To prevent these problems, format text on the Macintosh using style links the same way you do in Windows.

Using Fntnames.pdf to Determine Style Links

Fntnames.pdf is designed to let you easily determine which style links to use for your fonts. You can check the font’s Macintosh menu name and then check the Windows menu name. When the two platforms do not have identical names, use the style linking information from the Windows menu column.

The following is a sample listing from the Fntnames.pdf file:

Pkg	PostScript Name	Macintosh Menu Name	Windows Menu Name, Style Link	Prefix
046	Futura	Futura Medium	Futura Medium	FU__
046	Futura-Heavy	Futura Heavy	Futura Medium, Bold	FUH__
046	Futura-Oblique	Futura Oblique	Futura Medium, Italic	FUO__
046	Futura-Heavy Oblique	Futura Heavy Oblique	Futura Medium, BoldItalic	FUHO_
046	Futura-ExtraBold	Futura ExtraBold	Futura ExtraBold	FUEB_
046	Futura-ExtraBoldOblique	Futura ExtraBold Oblique	Futura ExtraBold, Italic	FUEBO

As shown above, six font names display in font menus on the Macintosh:

- Futura Heavy
- Futura Oblique
- Futura HeavyOblique
- Futura ExtraBold
- Futura ExtraBoldOblique

However, only two font names display in font menus in Windows:

- Futura Medium
- Futura ExtraBold

Adobe

Adobe Technical Support

To access the other Futura typefaces in Windows, you must apply the bold or italic style to your text.

If you are using the font Futura on the Macintosh and you will be transferring your file to the Windows platform, use the style link options (i.e., the options listed in the “Windows Menu, Style Link” column) for Futura-Heavy, Futura-Oblique, Futura-HeavyOblique, and Futura-ExtraBoldOblique, instead of selecting these fonts directly from the font menu.

Note: The typeface trademark attribution symbols for the names in this document are provided immediately following the Contents page. The typeface trademark attribution statements for the names in this document are provided in Appendix B. The first use of any trademark name in any document must include the corresponding trademark attribution symbol. This document may be freely reproduced or distributed in whole but not in part, and the content and notices may not be altered or removed. This document may not be distributed without the trademark attribution information in Appendix B.

Appendix A: Font Menu Name Revisions

The fonts listed in this appendix have been revised to make the font menu names identical for the plain style for both the Macintosh and Windows environments. These revisions were not done for the 35 core fonts found in most PostScript printers because of the number of printer driver programs that have hard-coded those font names into the software.

An industry-sponsored convention for the abbreviations used for style characteristics, such as Obl to represent oblique, can be found in Adobe Technical Note #5088: “Font Naming Issues.” However, there is no guarantee that either Adobe or other font vendors strictly follow the convention.

The following table requires some care to interpret. The software used to format this table may insert a hyphen to fit a name into a cell, where no hyphen exists in the actual font name. The revised font menu names do not use hyphens. When a hyphenated name appears in a New menu name column, the formatting software has hyphenated the word. Also, style descriptors such as “semi” and “bold” are not separated by hyphens or spaces in the revised names.

The following table shows only the names of those fonts in a family whose names were changed.
