

Change File Type 1.0.2 for Mac OS

October 10, 1998

Introduction

Change File Type is a contextual menu plug-in for the Finder which adds the ability to change the file type and creator codes of selected files. The plug-in changes the type and creator by opening the TypeShuffler application and passing it the list of files and / or folders that you have selected in the Finder.

To use the plug-in, place it in the Contextual Menu Items folder or drop it on your closed System Folder icon. You will need to restart your computer before you can use it.

Once you've restarted your computer, from within the Finder you can hold down the control key while clicking on files and the plug-in will add an additional menu item ("Change File Type...") to the contextual menu. This new menu item allows you to change the file type and creator codes of any selected file. If more than one file is selected, the type and creator for all selected files will be changed. In addition, if you select a folder which contains files, then all the files within that folder will have their type and creator changed.
